Causses Gorges - Gorges du Tarn Causses

Paysage sous Champerboux (nathalie.thomas)

An outdoor exploration of traditional architecture and panoramic views over the Causse de Sauveterre and the mountains of the Aubrac.

Sheltered from the predominant winds, you walk on a draille (drovers' road) through the very heart of the UNESCO World Heritage site. Limestone crosses adorned with the benefactor's name dot the route like votive offerings.

On your path...

Crosses (A)

On this walk, you will see many ancient crosses. Each is unique and exists for different reasons. The iron cross with the sculpted pedestal in Champerboux is the oldest. It seems to have been linked to pilgrimages and more precisely to the network of routes leading to Santiago di Compostella.

In most cases, the presence of a cross is a reminder by the Church of Catholicism. Very often erected at crossroads, the crosses served as waymarks, showed the parish borders and signposted memorial sites or sites for contemplation.

The grande draille d'Aubrac (main Aubrac drovers' road) (B)

Since they always took the same routes, the many herbivores that instinctively moved from the south to pasture land further north created a network of paths called drailles, which were subsequently used for transhumance (seasonal herded migrations).

A part of your route is on a very old drovers' road known as the grande draille d'Aubrac, which linked the hinterland of Montpellier with the Aubrac plateau. It was also used as a trade route between plains and mountains, giving access to the region's fairs.

Saint-Guilhem (C)

In the Middle Ages, the spread of Christianity encouraged an enthusiasm for religion. This route was used by crowds of pilgrims heading for the Abbey of Gellone, via Sainte-Enimie to see the saint's relics. The route is currently a long-distance hiking trail linking Aumont-Aubrac and Saint-Guilhem-le-Désert in the Hérault. It is 240 km long, crosses 4 departments and offers exceptionally diverse scenery.
